Liturgy 101~Amen Use

There are two special instances of the use of Amen that seem to call for separate treatment. The first is the Amen formerly spoken by the people at the close of the great Prayer of Consecration in the liturgy. The second is that which was uttered by each of the faithful when he received the Body and Blood of Christ.

Amen after the consecration

When we consider the "great Prayer of Consecration" a few words of explanation are necessary. There can be no doubt that for the Christians of the earlier ages of the Church the precise moment of the conversion of the bread and wine upon the altar into the Body and Blood of Christ was not so clearly apprehended. This is because back then and until the 1960's Mass was being celebrated in Latin, a language not popularly understood in all places. They were satisfied to believe that the change was wrought in the course of a long "prayer of thanksgiving" (known to us as the Eucharistic prayer), a prayer made up of several elements — preface, recitation of the words of institution, memento for living and dead, invocation of the Holy Spirit, etc. — which prayer they nevertheless conceived of as one "action" or consecration, to which, after a doxology, they responded by a solemn Amen, an Amen that is to the fullest extent possible sung by the people as the great response to the gift of the presence of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ now present on the altar.

Amen after communion

The Amen which in many liturgies is spoken by the faithful at the moment of receiving Holy Communion, that is the Amen spoken after the Minister of the Eucharist shows the hosts and says "The Body of Christ," may also be traced back to early century usage. It was a common practice in the early Church that when anyone received Communion they responded Amen, and then kissed the hand of the bishop who had brought it to them.

The point for us to consider is that the practice of answering Amen traces back to the early centuries, in fact the first and second centuries, when nearly all of the Church fathers make a reference to supplying an illustration of this common practice. In this instance, we are affirming that we do believe it is truly the Body and Blood of Christ. It is a little word, Amen, which indicates a strong affirmation, and translates in our present terminology as "let it be so," or "I do believe." This simple word expressed the faith we should have whenever we pray but certainly as we approach the Lord in the Blessed Sacrament.
